"A lyrical volume to remind Floridians that our coastline is not just our greatest natural asset. It's our greatest asset, period. Unspoiled also evokes another state treasure: our writers. Florida's literary luminescence shines from these pages."

Cynthia Barnett
Senior Writer at Florida Trend magazine, and author of Mirage: Florida and the Vanishing Water of the Eastern U.S.

We Floridians love our coasts. We love our fishing. We love to swim and surf and eat seafood and build sand castles. Florida's beaches are pure white stretches of bliss that feed our souls, a natural gift as important as the Rocky Mountains or the Grand Canyon. How could it possibly be worth it to risk the health of Florida's number-one economic engine – its coasts – for preposterous promises peddled by out-of-state oil lobbyists? Their campaign cash may win them friends in Tallahassee and Washington, but ordinary Floridians know better. In this volume, 38 writers, scientists and students share their visions of Florida's Gulf of Mexico coast, and reject the greedy proposition that our state should put its best resource at risk.
